

The Max Weber Institute of Sociology at Heidelberg University invites applications for a doctoral position starting in September 2021 for a period of two years (extension possible). The position will contribute to research and teaching in the areas of the Chair for Political Sociology (Serrano Velarde).

1 Doctoral Researcher (m/f/d)
(E 13 TV-L, 50%)

Qualified applicants are expected to have obtained an excellent MA degree in sociology or a neighboring field, to be competent in both political sociology and methods of empirical social research (qualitative or quantitative), and to be committed to innovative teaching (teaching load is 2 hours per week during the semester). Fluency in English and German is required. Applicants should pursue a dissertation project, preferably related to the field of political sociology.

Applications should be submitted by 30th of May 2021 at the latest, including a letter of interest, a CV, diplomas, a one-page research proposal, and contact information of two persons who can provide a reference. Please send your application electronically (one pdf-document) to sabine.renningshoff@mwi.uni-heidelberg.de.

Heidelberg University is an equal opportunity employer and all qualified applicants will be considered. In an effort to increase the share of women, applications by female researchers are especially encouraged. Preference will be given to disabled applicants with equal qualifications.

Information on policies for personal data in accordance with Art. 13 DS-GVO can be found on our homepage https://www.uni-heidelberg.de/datenschutz_personal.