Mixed Methods Research – Epistemological and Methodological Implications

at the 9th International Conference on Social Science Methodology (RC33), University of Leicester (United Kingdom)

Conference Date: September 11th – 16th, 2016

Submission Deadline for Papers: 21st January, 2016

Session Topic

Mixed methods research has a long tradition in social science and currently under major resurgence. In this session we would like to stimulate an exchange over epistemological issues arising from mixed methods research. Do we move ‘beyond paradigms’ with mixed methods research? What are lessons learned from empirical mixed methods research? Beyond design features of mixed methods studies, we would like to reflect upon epistemological implications of mixed methods research.

We will not consider proposals dealing with mere presentations of mixed methods designs.

Session Convenors

Susanne Vogl (susanne.vogl@univie.ac.at), Leila Akremi (leila.akremi@tu-berlin.de) & Cornelia Thierbach (cornelia.thierbach@tu-berlin.de)
